TRICKY WORDS — TELL YOUR CHILD THESE STRAIGHT AWAY

The boy went home from the park. He was tired and his feet were sore. He sat on a bench to rest. Then he saw something on the path — a smooth, flat stone. He picked it up.

The stone felt cool in his hand. It had a shine, like something from the shore. Once, before this week, he had seen a stone just like it. He sat still and let his mind go back.

Before the cold came, he went with Dad to the shore. The air was fresh and the sand soft. "Come and explore with me!" said Dad. They ran along the beach and played in the waves. That night, they sat by a fire and the flames jumped and flicked.

The next day, he explored the rock pools.
He found more and more shells! Dad helped him put them on a wire. "We can make a gift," he said. He twisted the wire with care. It looked so nice!

Then it was time to go. He spotted a stone by the shore. It was smooth and flat.
"Keep it safe," said Dad. "So you never forget this trip." He put the stone in his pocket with a smile.

The boy sat up and looked around. He still had that shore stone at home. But in his hand was a new stone, just as smooth! He held it up to the light. The shore felt so close.

He ran home to get his shore stone. Now he had a pair! He took some wire and made a loop for each one. He would make a gift for Dad — just like before.

He gave the stones to Dad. "From the shore and from the park," he said. He smiled wide. "I will keep them with me," he said. "So I never forget." He wore them on his bag that day.
